Songs for the Journey

In our midweek worship this Lent, we will focus each week on the psalm from the preceding Sunday's worship. The psalms appointed for the Sundays in Lent this year are particularly powerful prayers for us. The book of Psalms is the hymnbook of the Bible and the place in Scripture where the human voice is most prominently heard speaking to God instead of the other way around. As such, the psalms have become very important prayers for Christians as we journey here in this world, to deeper participation in the life of God's reign.

Each of these psalms speak to one of our challenges in the journey of faith, the journey of life, and the place of God's grace for us on that journey. In these songs sung by our forebears for nearly 3,000 years, we find hope, along with words from witnesses to God's gift to us and the world in Christ Jesus.

This week: Looking for water in dry and arid places

The journey of faith we walk can have many rich and flourishing places, where we feel refreshed and filled by God's love and presence. And it can wind its way through arid deserts, times that can last very long where we are thirsty for God and longing to be sated. Psalm 63 finds hope in the God who is like water in a dry land, the living water we need that Jesus promises the woman at the well today.

Copies of today's Wednesday noon sermon are on the table with the service folders tonight, and on the church website at www.mountolivechurch.org and select "Sermons" from the list at the bottom of the page.
